How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Horizon Tactical Fixed Income Fund, through its actively managed approach to fixed income markets, seeks to provide total return through a combination of current income and capital appreciation. To achieve this objective, the Fund makes dynamic adjustments to duration, as well as tactically de-risking higher-yielding fixed income investments during bouts of volatility, while otherwise maintaining exposure to higher risk parts of the fixed income universe. The year ending November 30, 2024, featured elevated bond market volatility, and Fund performance met expectations given that market environment.

Elevated interest rate volatility impacted the Fund's tactical duration positioning, causing underperformance relative to broad investment-grade bonds early in the period. As rates trended upward following the start of the Federal Reserve's cutting cycle in September, the Fund's duration positioning was a tailwind to performance.

Spreads on corporate credit and other higher-risk portions of the fixed income market generally contracted throughout this period as the economy proved stronger-than-anticipated and monetary policy headwinds flipped to tailwinds. The Fund's structural tilt toward these higher-yielding securities was accretive to performance during the period.
